Acknowledgments

So many special people helped make this book possible that I cannot possibly list them all. In truth, I have created nothing new; I have simply synthesized the wonderful work done by an army of hardworking and courageous physicians and healers.

I would like to extend my sincerest thanks to:

First and foremost, my staff. Their hard work, compassion, and dedication (and, I must admit, patience with me) are what made my work possible.

My research partner, Birdie (Barbara Bird). Her sense of humor and encouragement kept me going when I got tired. Her dedication to quality shines in every facet of her work. Cheryl Alberto, Denise Haire, Angie Borlik, Sue Marston, Amy Podd, and Mary Groom make everything run smoothly, no matter how much chaos I create.

The Anne Arundel Medical Center librarian, Joyce Miller. Over the last twenty-six years, I have often wondered when she would politely tell me to stop asking for so many studies. So far, she has not. In fact, she always smiles when I ask her for more.

Rev. Bren Jacobson and Dr. Alan Weiss, who keep me intellectually, emotionally, and spiritually honest while reminding me to reclaim my sense of humor.

My wonderful and dedicated publicists, Dean Draznin and Terri Slater, who are my teammates in making effective treatment and health available to everyone.

Bob Baurys and Sue Hrim, who took Bob's suffering and recovering from CFS as an opportunity to make effective treatment available for everyone by creating the Fibromyalgia & Fatigue Centers nationally (www.fibroandfatigue.com).

The publishers at Avery/Penguin books and my editor, Rebecca Behan.

My many teachers, the real heroes and heroines in their fields, whose names could fill this book. They include William Crook, Max Boverman, Brugh Joy, Janet Travell, William Jefferies, Hal Blatman, Jay Goldstein, Paul Levine, Leo Galland, Leonard Jason, George Mitchell, Lloyd Lewis, Michael Rosenbaum, Murray Susser, Charles Lapp, Paul Cheney, James Brodsky, Melvyn Werbach, Sherry Rogers, Sheri Lieberman, Robert Ivker, Tony Lebro, and Alan Gaby.

The many chronic fatigue syndrome and fibromyalgia support groups. These are easily the best patient support groups I have ever seen.

And finally, God and the universe, for the guidance and infinite blessings I have been given and for using me as an instrument for healing.

Introduction

I remember 1975. I was in my third year of medical school, doing my pediatrics rotation. I had always excelled, having finished college in three years. Now I was the second-youngest in a class of more than two hundred students, and I was continuing to perform well. My approach to life was to move quickly—“full speed ahead.” But then, a nasty viral illness hit me and made it hard for me to even get out of bed for my morning pediatrics lecture. I cannot forget walking into an auditorium full of medical students, the professor saying, “Teitelbaum, why are you...” As he said “late?” I just about collapsed on the steps.

Although I was barely able to function, I spent the next four weeks working in the electron microscopy and research labs. The work I performed there was considered low-key—good tasks for a medical student trying to recuperate. But my brain fog made even these duties impossible, and by the end of the month, I was finding it impossible to even get out of bed before noon. I wanted to push forward and try harder. Though it was not what I wanted to hear, one wise professor advised me that this was not a time to push forward but rather a time to take a leave of absence and “regroup.” I am still thankful for this teacher’s guidance.

My illness seemed to close a door to one chapter of my life and open other doors to whole new possibilities of self-exploration. As I had to drop out of medical school and had no more scholarship or work-study, and was too ill to work, I was also homeless. Taking off in my '65 Dodge Dart, I had the novel experience of having no agenda, no plans. I was to meet many teachers on my journey. Most important, I was taking time to get to know myself.

With my family’s and friends’ help and support and my own inner work, as well as what I learned from people I met while I was homeless, I recovered my energy and strength and went on to finish medical school and residency. Though I did well, I continued to intermittently suffer the many diverse symptoms seen in fibromyalgia. My experiences with chronic fatigue syndrome and fibromyalgia left me with an appreciation of the impact of these illnesses. The symptoms that persisted—such as fatigue, achiness, poor sleep, and bowel problems—acted as the arena in which I learned how to help other people overcome these illnesses. It also taught me that it helps to have a sense of humor to survive this illness.

If you have chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS), fibromyalgia syndrome (FMS), myalgic encephalomyelitis (ME), or another disabling chronic fatigue state, you have been through a difficult journey. I remember being told that I was depressed. I was depressed. I was unable to function. Most people with chronic fatigue syndrome have to struggle just to get compassion and understanding.

Building on what I have learned since 1975, my research partner, Barbara Bird, and I initially completed an open study (in 1993) of sixty-four patients with disabling chronic fatigue.¹ In 1999, we completed a randomized, double-blind follow-up study, and appreciate the assistance given by National Institutes of Health researchers in developing the study protocol. This study showed that 91 percent of you can improve with proper treatment, and half of those with fibromyalgia were pain free at ninety-nine days.² Our recently published study showed an average 45 percent increase in energy in CFS/FMS by simply taking ribose (see Chapter 2).³ My staff and I have treated more than three thousand CFS/FMS patients, and tens of thousands more have been treated by doctors at the Fibromyalgia & Fatigue Centers (www.fibroandfatigue.com) and by many other physicians worldwide. More than 50 percent of our patients are much better—that is, their symptoms are no longer a major problem—with our treatment, while most of the remainder have shown significant, albeit incomplete, improvement. Only 10 to 15 percent have had no significant improvement.

We have found that, on average, patients begin to feel better in two to three months.^{1, 2}

If you suffer from CFS, FMS, or ME, this book will provide you with the tools and information you need to move beyond fatigue and into wellness. If you are a physician, it will teach you how to help—often dramatically—your patients who experience chronic exhaustion, including those frustrating cases in which no treatment has thus far been successful.

If you have researched chronic fatigue and immune dysfunction syndrome (CFIDS—also called chronic fatigue syndrome, or CFS, and I use CFS and CFIDS interchangeably), you will find some information here that is familiar, but you will also discover much that is new. For instance, to restore energy production and recover, it is usually necessary to treat many different problems simultaneously. Most sufferers of chronic exhaustion have a mix of at least five or six underlying problems (out of more than a hundred possible problems), which vary from person to person. This occurs because each problem can cause several others. You may have found some relief in the past by treating one, or a few, of these problems; I think you will be pleasantly surprised at what happens when you treat all your underlying problems simultaneously.

Certainly, we still have much more to learn in this area. However, we have now crossed a threshold and can effectively treat the illness. As the Journal of the American Academy of Pain Management noted in an editorial, “This study by Dr. Teitelbaum et al confirms what years of clinical success have shown—that the treatment approach described in Chapter 4 of The Trigger Point Manual (by Dr. Janet Travell) is effective, that subclinical abnormalities are important, and that the comprehensive and aggressive metabolic approach to treatment in Teitelbaum’s study is highly successful and makes fibromyalgia a very treatable disorder. The study by Dr. Teitelbaum et al and years of clinical experience makes this approach an excellent and powerfully effective part of the standard of practice for treatment of people who suffer from FMS and MPS [myofascial pain syndrome]—both of which are common and devastating syndromes. It is very exciting that this research helps to usher in a new, more effective era in medical care by treating the patient and not only the laboratory tests!”⁴

It’s time for you to get well! Ready?
