

The Southern French Nobility
and the Albigensian Crusade

ELAINE GRAHAM-LEIGH

*The Southern French Nobility
and the Albigensian Crusade*

The Albigensian Crusade was called by Pope Innocent III in 1208 against the Count of Toulouse in response to the murder of the papal legate Pierre des Castelnau. The Pope's aim was to force the Count and other nobles in Languedoc to take action against the Cathar heretics in their lands, but in the end, the defeat of Catharism in the south of France was achieved through the establishment of the Inquisition and the extension of French royal authority to the area. While some Occitan noble families survived the crusade, others were destroyed and the behaviour of the crusaders towards the local nobility has often been regarded as rather arbitrary, unconnected to how these families related to each other before 1209. This study takes the case of the Trencavel Viscounts of Béziers and Carcassonne, who were the only members of the higher nobility to lose their lands to the crusade, and argues that an understanding of how the Occitan nobility fared in the crusade years must be based in the context of the politics of the noble society of Languedoc, not only in the thirteenth century but also in the twelfth.

ELAINE GRAHAM-LEIGH gained her Ph.D. from the University of London.

Names

I have not attempted to anglicise proper names except where the English form is so well established as to render any other usage inappropriate. In the same way, except where another form has become customary I have attempted to use the form of the name most suitable for its bearer: for instance, William of Newburgh, Guillem de Montpellier but Guillaume de Puylaurens.

Money

The Trencavel issued their own silver coinage in both Carcassonne and Béziers during the twelfth century.¹ However, the principal currency of both southern France and northern Spain was the silver coinage issued by the bishops of Maguelonne as counts of Melgueil.² The vast majority of Trencavel monetary transactions used Melgorian sols rather than their own currency and the Carcassonne coinage seems to have been abandoned by the end of the twelfth century. References to coinage are to the Melgorian unless otherwise stated.
